THE WORLD IS GOING CRAZY

A quick review of the headlines from the past week or two and you would be right to think that the world is going crazy:

1) The Centers for Disease Control in the US is telling us they have Ebola under control and it's spreading with no apparent strategy. Out paced only the fear of contracting the disease.
2) We are dropping more and more bombs on ISIS and they are gaining more and more ground.
3) The NY Metropolitan Opera is opening with an opera glorifying terrorism and anti-Semitism, and they call that art.
4) Vladimir Putin is annexing countries with little resistance.
5) The stock market is crashing and soaring in the same week, in the same day…
6) People under the guise of a "religion of peace" blame others for "occupying" lands while waging a war to establish a world caliphate.
7) The enemies of our friends who are enemies of our enemies are now our friends, leaving our friends abandoned.
8) In the United States there are now more gun stores than gas stations.[1]
9) And we haven't even started to talk about global warming and the melting of the polar ice caps

You would be right to think that world has gone mad, but then at the same time, last night my SF Giants won the Nation League Pennant for the 3rd time in 5 years so all seems right with the world to me.

In all seriousness as we enter in to this New Year was would be forgiven to be filled with worry and concern. It seems that the
